

Boston High School Hell: (my journey through high school hell)

In 1976 the city of Boston erupted with racial violence. Court ordered busing was an attempt to racially balance the Boston Public Schools. It had the opposite effect Blacks were attacked in the streets. The buses full of black children being taken to class were pelted with bottles and rocks. Every parent who was able to, took their children out of the public schools. This exodus dramatically changed the face of the student population. Now the average student was the poorest of the poor, the ones who could not afford to leave. The predominately white faculty was horrified by the change. Some retired, some tried to teach but took all of their personal days off and claimed that the students were un-teachable.

I taught as a substitute and classroom teacher in a Boston public high school during the early eighties. I was not prepared for the racial polarization that I found. The stories I wrote are short. They are a quick snapshot of the people I met and the culture I encountered. Sadly, the culture of the Boston Public Schools has changed little over time. The challenges that exist in these stories remain very similar to the challenges of today.
